tional feature of the exhibit. Mr. Harding of the Agricultural Office, through the kindness of Mr. Neville, thinned two of his apple trees, leaving two trees unthinned to compare for an experiment. Mr. Neville brought the apples exhibited into the Agricultural Office and told Mr. Curran that both samples were a fair average for both trees. It was plainly seen at the exhibit the difference between them. The thinned samples represented practically all No. 1, of excellent colors and of a uniform size; while the unthinned fruit would grade more No. 2's than No. 1's. The advantages gained from thinning fruit are many fold, a larger size apple of a more uniform appearance with distinctly more color. Ease in picking and packing in a higher priced product. The one great advantage is in the fact that the tree if thinned is not so heavily taxed to produce more fruit than it is really capable of doing, and in this way a fair crop of apples can be expected every year from the orchard. "Spray for Codling Moth" was a sign read by all. A sample of Lime Sulphur wash was exhibited to show the material that is used as a mixture. Apple buyers now are in many instances refusing to buy apples from unsprayed orchards. So now is the time to get busy, spray your apple orchards every spring.

Crate fattening your chickens is a good advice and a small miniature fattening crate was of interest to many who are feeling the necessity of marketing only crate fattened chickens.

A model of an improved fowl house also demonstrated the increased returns obtained from handling poultry in a dry, clean, well ventilated house and where the sun can penetrate to all four corners of the house. Hens will lay profitably in winter if provided with comfortable quarters, but not unless.

The centrepiece of the exhibit was a large group photo of the Agricultural Class of last winter, and many of the visitors seemed pleased to recognize so many young and old faces they new so well.

Surveyors instruments and maps of tile underdrainage, a milk testing machine, a fat recording outfit for determining the percentage of fat in the individuals of a dairy herd. A milk cooler with small hoist for lifting cans out of tank on to a milk drawing waggon, bee appliances, and many other articles of interest to our progressive farmers made the exhibit a unique feature of the show.

A fine exhibit was the general remark of the many who visited the stand.

Dr. Williams' Fly Oil.

In Napanee you can get Dr. Williams' Fly Oil (full strength) in 3 sizes—quarts, 35c, ½ gallons, 60c, 1 gal. cans at $1.00. We also have the one made in Boston called Cow Ease at $1.00 gallon, at Wallace's Drug Store, Limited, Napanee.

DESERONTO ROAD.

Quite a severe frost visited this locality on Saturday night, and did much damage to the tomato crop, especially the late ones, also the small fruits as ground cherries.

Threshing is nearly all finished for this fall, with the exception of a few odd jobs, which will be completed when the Buckwheat is threshed.

Mr. Scrimshaw has taken Mrs. McCaul's farm to work on shares and has already moved in half of the house and commenced work.

We understand that Mr. James Thompson is preparing to build a new barn the coming summer having already hauled the gravel in for that purpose.

HISTORY OF LENNOX ADDINGTON

—BY—

WALTER S. HERRINGTON,

This long looked-for volume placed on sale in Napanee early week. The book contains a history of this county from the earliest times and with its eighty-five illustrations makes a complete record. Prof. L. Grant, of Queen's University, has given a careful review of the work in part:

"Now we have at least one history fit to place in any library. Mr. Herrington has already done good work in his Heroines of Canadian History and other books and in History of Lennox and Addington adds to his reputation."

"The dark blue cover is simple and dignified and the 420 pages are printed on good paper. The simple and sedate though not without lighter touches. Instead of biographies of all and sundry Mr. Herrington has confined himself to short sketches of the past and present county, members in the Federal and Provincial Houses and of the Wardens of County Council."

"The illustrations are numerous and well chosen, including many reproductions of old prints, map daguerrotypes. Mr. Herrington is to be congratulated on having written an interesting and scholarly book on having it produced in so refined and dignified a form."

This History should be in every home and school in the County. A book which any one who has lived in the County will be sure to read and we predict a big sale.

The price is $3.00 net with postage 25c extra. The book may be purchased at T. S. Henry's or A. E. Paul's stores or from C. M. Warner, Napanee, Ontario.

Waterman Fountain Pens.

In Napanee you can get the genuine Ideal Waterman Pen at Wallace's Drug Store, Limited, also Waterman fountain pen ink—the best ink for fountain pen, price 10 cents.

His Skull Fractured.

On Saturday morning early Henry Howard while on a walk wandered upon the G.T.R. tracks, the station and was hit by an engine. His skull was fractured and he was otherwise injured. He was taken to the Hotel Dieu, Kingston, where several pieces of bone were removed from his head. He is improving slowly.

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBIT.

The exhibit of the Agricultural Office attracted a large number of the crowd which passed through the Palace. A great deal of time and trouble was spent in getting it ready and the appreciation by the visitors warranted it.

The sheaves sent in for competition by a number of the young men who were in attendance at Mr. Curran's Agricultural Class last winter, made a very tasty and pleasing decoration to the exhibit.

The sheaves were selected by the boys from an acre plot of barley; the idea being to encourage hand selecting of grain as a means of improving any variety in respect to yield and quality of grain, strength of straw, etc. Mr. Ray Allison was the winner of a special prize offered by Mr. Curran, with Mr. Eddie Huffman a very close second.

A very excellent sample of Delaware potatoes grown by Mr. George Spragg of Violet, dug from an eight acre field were to be seen, exemplifying the results obtained by very thorough cultivation and a generous use of an artificial fertilizer. These potatoes were sprayed twice by the Ontario Department of Agriculture and twice by Mr. Spring himself to demonstrate the value of Bordeaux Mixture as a preventative against Late Blight or Rot of potatoes. The returns from these eight acres also were well demonstrated by three very excellent samples of potatoes representing the produce of three average hills taken from Mr. Spring's field.

This little exhibit in itself proves convincingly that it only pays to produce good crops, and it can be done by an intelligent and thorough cultivation with the judicious use of farm manure, besides the adoption of improved methods such as spraying every ten or fourteen days to insure a crop.

The Ensilage corn decorating the wooden pillars was grown by Mr. William Pringle from seed supplied to him by the Agricultural Office last spring and the variety was White Cap Yellow Dent, one of the best ensilage corns for the farmer to grow if he wants a good heavy crop about silo filling time. Two excellent samples of O.A.C. No. 21, Barley, grown by Mr. Chas. McKim and Mr. Herrington from seed supplied by Mr. Curran. Both these boys grew an acre of this barley for competition and the yields respectively were 48 and 40 bushels to the acre.

The advantages gained by thinning fruit trees was also another educational lesson.

when the Buckwheat is threshed. Mr. Scrimshaw has taken Mrs. McCaul's farm to work on shares and has already moved in half of the house and commenced work.
We understand that Mr. James Thompson is preparing to build a new barn the coming summer having already hauled the gravel in for that purpose.
Mr. Metcalf, of the Deseronto Canning Factory, met with quite a loss the other day, when his horse fell in an old well in Deseronto, which had been covered over. The horse struck his head against the stones and was found dead when they got him out.

Nearly everybody from here attended the Napanee Fair on Wednesday and helped to swell the crowd.

Wedding Bells.

A pretty wedding took place Saturday evening, the 13th of October, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul, when their eldest daughter, Alice Olivia, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert A. Telfer, Editor and Proprietor of the "Journal" of Napanee. The wedding was a quiet one, the very near relatives and friends being present. Mr. Telfer certainly to be congratulated on his so far and accomplished a daughter. Miss Alice will be greatly missed particularly in the church and in circles where her rich, full voice always given the greatest pleasure and satisfaction. The happy couple left for their future home on Saturday night, relatives of the groom, Niagara, London, Sarnia and Wexford, will be visited enroute. Miss Alice will arrive in Humboldt about middle of next week. The presents were beautiful and numerous, testifying to Miss Paul's popularity. With others, the Express is wishing them a long and happy life.

District Meeting.

The Financial District Meeting of the Methodist Church was held at the Trinity Methodist Church on Tuesday, 9th. The Chairman, Rev. Wilson B. A. presided. Nearly all the ministers were present, also a representation of lay delegates. Votational exercises were conducted by the chairman. The needs of the mission fields of the District were looked into and the Missionary Board recommended to make the necessary grants. The amounts allotted to the circuit and mission by the church Boards for Connexional purposes were accepted. A resolution was passed providing for an exchange of pulpits, on the 2nd Sunday in November, in the interests of our mission work and each pastor requested permission to take the missionary collection and subscription on the third day in November. The Missionary Committee was instructed to carry out the plan of exchange. The Educational work was left in the hands of the pastor for his own circuit. Informed that the people might become discouraged by the needs and work of the Temperance and Moral Reform work of the Methodist Church, District Secretary, Rev. C. W. D. B. A., Rev. S. T. Tucker B. A., and the chairman were asked to arrange for a general exchange of pulpits on the District on the 1st Sunday in October. Revs. S. T. Tucker B. A., and E. W. Rowland were pointed to co-operate with the officers of the District Epworth League in arranging for the District Epworth League Convention at Newburgh, September 28th. A Missionary Convention was held in the afternoon, several interesting and inspiring addresses were given on the different phases of missionary work followed by a discussion, that should be a help to the work.

HEROIC WOMEN.

West is Full of Stories of Brave Deeds.

A bright young woman in the newer part of British Columbia is the heroine of a bear story that is quite true. She is a farmer's daughter, and one of her daily duties is to milk the cows. One evening not long ago she was so engaged when a bear suddenly came out of the bush a few feet away from her. The bucket was partly filled with rich Jersey milk, but the girl left it on the ground and beat a hasty retreat, which was precisely what Bruin wanted. With much relish he emptied the bucket, and then ambled away.

The next evening the milkmaid was better prepared, and when she went to the pasture she carried the bucket in one hand and in the other a shot-gun, which she leaned against a tree; this because she looked for a return visit of the milk-loving bear. She was not disappointed. The pail was nearly filled this time when Bruin appeared, coming toward her in a very evident hurry. The girl repeated her flight of the evening before, and the bear again made up to the bucket. When his head was comfortably into the milk, the gun, loaded with number six shot, was very precisely aimed, and a second or two later Bruin lay low.

The point of this story is that the women who live in the frontier country have need of keeping their wits about them. And, as a matter of fact, most of them do. Many tales are told of the bravery, fortitude, and remarkable endurance of woman settlers in the remote places of the West and North, some of whom have also proved themselves the possessors of exceptional ability and business keenness.

Thus there is an honor roll of at least a half-dozen women in Alaska who played the part of mining prospector so well that they made good stakes and won fame and fortune. They were, in the theory and practice of placer mining as any man in the North, and proved it by results. It is told of one of these venturesome six that once, to save her husband's bank at Nome from failure, she traveled three hundred miles in midwinter, alone and by dog-team, carrying a substantial clean-up of gold nuggets from her own holdings. By day and night, through snow and blizzard, she kept to the trail, and reached Nome, with her golden relief, just in time to avert the threatened disaster.

Another woman, not a gold-hunter, mushed 1,450 miles from Rampart to Whitehorse, in the Yukon. She did it alone, too, and in the dead of a deadly winter. With her train of dogs she made an average of twenty-five miles a day, and on one or two days covered thirty-five miles. That is good traveling on the winter trail, even for a man, and especially good for a woman when for the greater part of the way she ran, not rode, holding only by her hands to the bars of the dog-sleigh. For on some days it was too cold to ride; fifty and sixty and seventy below zero, which means that one must keep moving.

Just like a man, this woman musher rode and tramped, sometimes breaking a way ahead for the dogs when she zero-fog was too dense for them to see. Just like a man, too, when out of reach of the road houses, she made camp at night-time beside the trail, and slept the deep warm sleep of the outdoor North. A hole in the snow for a bed, a few fir branches for a mattress, and her Arctic dog-robes for bedspreads, she lay herself down to sleep, alone; and at grey dawn she was up and off again. Not many women could have done it, but this woman did it, and suffered nothing more serious than the loss of a few pounds weight in her two months on the winter trail.

THE CHIEF CAUSE OF CRIMINALITY

Born With Criminal Instincts, Life Is a Battle Against Them.

There is None Righteous, No, Not One — Where Lies the Blame? — The Value of a Correct Diagnosis — We Can Oppose Sin Best When We Know Its Origin—Aids and Disadvantage in Fighting Sin — Divine Help Necessary—How the Needful is Provided.

PASTOR RUSSELL

as of any other ailment. The better we understand the origin of sin and the methods of its operation, the more successful we shall be in combating it.

Our forefathers erred, evidently, in their declaration of total depravity. None of us ever met a human being entirely depraved—dead to all good influences. Experience, however, corroborates the Bible statement that "There is none righteous, no, not one." All are sinners, born in a state of sin, with inclination toward sin.

The Pastor declared that we are not to conclude that God made us sinners. All God's work is perfect. The Bible tells us that our first parents sinned and came under the Divine sentence of death. St. Paul says, "By one man's disobedience sin entered the world, and death as a result of sin."

Then the Pastor showed that sinful tendencies are evidences of man's fall, and all under such influences are to be pitied. But true pity must sympathize with the sinner, not with the sin. Our best effects will be attained through a knowledge of facts and the exercise of proper sympathy.

Parental Sympathy needed.

Pastor Russell next declared that increase of knowledge of facts will bless both parents and children. Parents must learn that their mental states birth-mark their children—either favorably or unfavorably. It requires a great deal of training to work out of the child's disposition what was inbred at birth.

A weighty responsibility rests upon parents respecting prenatal influences. With what loyalty to God and righteousness should the procreative powers be exercised! What care should the father use to surround the mother with every good mental influence during gestation. What a different world we would live in, if parents lived up to these principles!

"Brethren, What Shall We Do?"

Then the Pastor demonstrated with Scripture that life is God's gift, designed for the sinless. Adam was condemned, or damned, as soon as he became a transgressor; and all his race were born in the same condemned condition. The question is, How shall we get from that condition?

The Bible answer is that God had compassion on our race, and provided

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—World shipments much larger than expected had a depressing effect today in wheat. There was a transient rally, but the market closed heavy at a range varying from 1/4c net decline to an advance of 1/4c. Corn suffered a final setback of 1/4c to 1/2c, and oats finished with a loss of 1/2c to an equal gain. In provisions the outcome was irregular, strung out from 10c off to 12 1/2c up.

The Liverpool market closed 1/4d lower on wheat, and unchanged on corn. Berlin and Budapest 1/4c lower.

CATTLE MARKETS

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Sept. 15.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, receipts of live stock for the week end—Sept. 13 were 3200 cattle, 4000 sheep and lambs, 1900 hogs and 1650 calves. The supply on the market this morning for sale amounted to 2600 cattle, 3300 sheep and lambs, 1100 hogs and 1400 calves.

Owing to the demand lately from American buyers for stockers, feeding cattle and common bulls, and the good prices being realized for the same, the offerings of such stock on this market were the largest for many months past. Sales of common bulls were at $2.50 to $3.75; feeding steers at $3 to $5.25, and stockers, at $3.25 to $4.55 per cwt. in car load lots, while the tone of the market for butchers' cattle was stronger, and prices were fully 25c per cwt. higher than a week ago.

The trade in small meats was also active, owing to the fact that American packers bought large numbers of lambs and grass fed calves, but notwithstanding this fact, the market for sheep and lambs was weaker.

Hogs continue weak prices today, scoring a further decline of 15 to 25c per cwt., and the indications are that they will go still lower in the near future.

Young Peoples' Association social gathering on Monday night. There was good attendance. Work of the year was talked over, and programme rendered and songs elected. Wedding Bells.

A pretty wedding took place on Saturday evening, the 13th of Sept. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. when their eldest daughter, Olivia, was united in marriage to Robert A. Telfer, Editor and proprietor of the "Journal." Humboldt Rev. J. P. Wilson B. A. officiated. The wedding was a quiet one with very few relatives and friends being present. Mr. Telfer is highly to be congratulated on winning a fair and accomplished bride. Olivia will be greatly missed partly in the church and in musical work where her rich, full voice has so given the greatest pleasure and satisfaction. The happy couple will leave for their future home on Saturday morning. Relatives of the groom at St. Catharines, London, Sarnia and Winnipeg will be visited enroute. They will arrive in Humboldt about the middle of next week. The wedding was very beautiful and numerous guests, including Miss Paul's popularity. Others, the Express joins in wishing them a long and happy life.

Meeting.

Financial District Meeting of the Methodist Church was held in the Methodist Church on Tuesday night. The Chairman, Rev. J. P. Wilson B. A. presided. Nearly all the members were present, also a fair attendance of lay delegates. Devotional exercises were conducted by the chairman. The needs of the members of the District were discussed and the Mission Board requested to make the necessary arrangements. The amounts allotted to each of the various Boards for Connexional Funds were accepted. A resolution was passed providing for an exchange of pulpits on the 2nd Sunday in November. The interests of our missionary work and each pastor requested as far as possible to take the missionary collection subscription on the third Sunday in November. The Missionary Committee was instructed to arrange for an exchange. The Education Committee was left in the hands of each for his own circuit. In order that people might become better acquainted with the needs and work of the Moral Reform and Moral Reform of the Methodist Church the Secretary, Rev. C. W. Demille, Rev. S. T. Tucker B. A., B. D., and chairman were asked to arrange a general exchange of pulpits in the District on the 1st Sunday in November. Revs. S. T. Tucker B. A., and E. W. Rowland were appointed to co-operate with the officers of the District Epworth League in preparing for the District Epworth Convention at Newburgh on September 28th. A Missionary Convention was held in the afternoon and evening, interesting and inspiring addresses were given on the different phases of missionary work followed by discussion, that should be a help and encouragement.

stress, and her Arctic dog-robbers for bedspreads, she lay herself down to sleep, alone; and at grey dawn she was up and off again. Not many women could have done it, but this woman did it, and suffered nothing more serious than the loss of a few pounds weight in her two months on the winter trail. Strange honeymoon trips sometimes fall to the lot of northern brides. A newly-wedded couple at Whitehorse wished to go to Dawson, their home-to-be. But they were too late in the season to catch the last steamer up the Yukon, and for a month they waited in Whitehorse. When the first snow came they set out for home by the overland route. A strange bridal outfit it was; dogs, and grub-box, and a sled big enough for two; and an arduous bridal tour ahead of them, via the winter Yukon trail. But they had a good time. The weather was not too sharp, the going was good, and the numerous road houses along the Dawson trail made convenient stopping places. When they reached Dawson they declared that they had not had a dull moment or an uncomfortable experience, and that dog-sled wedding trips in the North were good.

Ontario Has Best Apples.

Ontario has been awarded the sweepstake at the Cleveland Exhibition of the International Apple Shippers' Association which carries with it the President's Cup, as the best apple-growing Province or State on the North American Continent. Ontario won first in its own class, where it was grouped with Nova Scotia, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The Ontario exhibit was only collected on Monday, shipped on Tuesday, and carried the prizes off on Wednesday. Thirty varieties were shown—fifteen winter apples, five summer and ten fall. In regard to the summer apples allowance was made for the early season.

The cup is awarded by Mr. Ed. Loomis, of New York, President of the Association, and is open for annual competition.

Ravages of New Canal.

Acres upon acres of the finest fruit growing land in the Niagara fruit belt will have to be abandoned and turned over to the Government for the New Welland Ship Canal, according to the plan just registered in the Lincoln County office.

The right-of-way at some points is half a mile in width, and at no place is it less than 800 feet wide. At the lake front 1,500 feet out in the lake is claimed for harbor purposes. The canal cuts through the village of Homer where a number of the old landmarks and buildings will be removed. The outline just misses the new Anglican Church now in course of erection. Here the width of the right of way extends to one-half mile, owing to the location of a big lock, waste weir and side channels.

signed for the sinless. Adam was condemned, or damned, as soon as he became a transgressor; and all his race were born in the same condemned condition. The question is, How shall we get from that condition?

The Bible answer is that God had compassion on our race, and provided the Saviour. The Redeemer will have the right to restore to perfection Adam and all his posterity desirous of returning to God. The Message respecting this merciful arrangement is called the Gospel.

"Times of Restitution."

All desirous of returning to God's favor must be restored to that physical perfection in which Adam was before he sinned. When recovered, those who stand the tests of loyalty and obedience shall receive everlasting life through Jesus Christ, whose sacrificial death opened up the way.

The Pastor then stated that only recently have Bible students discerned how confused our forefathers were respecting the Divine Plan—through their neglect of the Bible for fourteen hundred years. They see now that Jesus, the Apostles and the Prophets taught that God's time for dealing with sinners is future—under Messiah's Kingdom. The thousand year period in which that Kingdom will rule the world, restraining sin, chastising sinners and helping the willing and obedient back to perfection, is called by St. Peter "(Years of) Times of Restitution of all things."—Acts 3: 19-21.

During those Times of Restitution, or resurrection, Satan will be bound, that he may no longer deceive humanity, putting darkness for light and light for darkness. Sin-blinded eyes shall be opened, and sin-deaf ears unstopped. The Message of God's Love shall be made known world-wide.

God's Dealing With the Church.

The Pastor then showed the difference between God's plan of salvation for the Church and that for the world. God desires that the Church consist of a very special class, zealous for righteousness and everything pleasing in His sight. He has issued a special call, therefore, and has prescribed special terms for the members of the Church.

All these must have the spirit, disposition, that Jesus had. They must walk in His steps the way of the cross, a narrow way, with few liberties to the flesh. In some respects their battle is the same that the world will have in the next age. Then will be the world's time for escaping the condemnation, imperfection—damnation—resulting from Adam's sin.

Bush Fires Near Guelph.

GUELPH, Sept. 16.—The entire neighborhood of New Germany, a village seven miles northwest of Guelph, is shrouded in smoke and the inhabitants are waging a night and day war against the flames in their bush lots. The peat fire that has been burning at the old Imphon farm near the R. C. Cemetery has now covered about fifteen acres of ground. A three-hour battle was waged against it Sunday by nearby residents without any considerable check on its progress.

Best Crop In the World.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 16.—The statistics of the new crop now rolling eastward in a mighty wave are most gratifying. On yesterday's market were 1,445 cars of wheat, 954 of which graded No. 1 northern, 278 of contract grade, and 210 No. 1 hard, or about 98 per cent. of the total. No other country in the world can show a crop of such splendid quality. Western Canada itself has never equalled this, and it has been some producer in its day.

With 1,000 cars in sight to-day, receipts promise to be quite as heavy.

Explosion Kills Fireman.

SARNIA, Sept. 16.—Word had been received here of a fatal accident that happened on the steamer Stephen C. Hall at Blind River. The steamer had loaded lumber for Detroit and Walkerville and was proceeding out of Blind River when a big boiler flue blew out, killing the fireman, Archie Swenor, of this place. The body was taken ashore and shipped to his home here for interment, the remains arriving here yesterday afternoon. The deceased fireman was 29 years of age and is survived by his widow and five children. He formerly resided at Trenton.

New Turkish Loan.

PARIS, Sept. 16.—The Petit Parisien learns that a Franco-Turkish agreement is about to be concluded authorizing a Turkish loan of 700,000,000 francs ($140,000,000) in France. The agreement deals also with the question of Turkish customs, and provides for railway concessions to French companies in Eastern Asia Minor and Syria.

A School Teacher's Death.

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 16.—The death occurred here yesterday of Miss Annie, daughter of the late Rev. John Carroll of Gananoque. She had been a patient at the hospital only one week when the end came. Miss Carroll was a teacher of the staff of St. Agnes' school, Belleville. The body was taken to Gananoque for burial.

PANAMA CANAL LOCKS.

No Vessel May Enter or Pass Through Them Under its Own Power.

It is impossible to convey in words anything approaching an adequate conception of the picture which the series of locks, with their massive, towering walls, and their equipment of colossal gates presents. It defies description, as it does the camera, even in its wonderful modern development, and can be portrayed only by the inspired pencil of a Pennell. It is stupendous, prodigious, overwhelming—even these adjectives are inadequate. As I stood above them recently with a distinguished engineer who had been a strenuous advocate of a sea level canal, I asked him if he could conceive of a safer place in which to put a great ship than inside one of the locks, and he replied without hesitation or equivocation that he could not.

When the time comes to operate the canal, this fact will be demonstrated so clearly that all the world will recognize it. Every device that human ingenuity can conceive has been adopted to secure safety for the vessels using the locks. In the first place, no vessel will be permitted to enter or pass through them under its own power. The worst accidents which have occurred in locks hitherto have been due to an engineer in the engine room misinterpreting a signal from the bridge, either going ahead when he should have gone back, or vice versa, and ramming a gate.

When a vessel arrives at a lock at Gatun or Miraflores, it will be tied up to the approach wall and turned over to the absolute control of the canal authorities. These will place a representative of their own on the bridge and another in the engine room. They will then connect the towing locomotives, or "electric mules," with the ship, two on either side and in advance of the bow, and two on either side and in the rear of the stern, and proceed to tow her into the lock—Joseph Bucklin Bishop in Scribner's.

"GARDEN TRUCK."

The ground dries out more quickly under a high headed tree and more fruit is blown off by the wind.

Mature the rhubarb and asparagus fields. Both crops are the best where there is an abundance of vegetable matter in the soil.

Asparagus roots, properly planted, fertilized and given good culture, will continue to produce large spears for fifteen to twenty years in succession.

If the currant or gooseberry bushes become infested with worms the pest can be abated by dusting the bushes with powdered white hellebore or spraying them with a solution made by adding the hellebore at the rate of a tablespoonful to a quart of water.

Lime dust around garden plants will keep away snails. They may also be trapped by putting cabbage leaves, lettuce or bits of raw potato about the infested places, leaving over night and then removing and destroying the snails harbored by the trap material.

COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON

Treasurer's Sale of Lands for Taxes.

COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON } BY VIRTUE OF A WARRANT under the
TO WIT: hand of the Warden and seal of the County of of July, A. D. 1913, and to me directed, commanding me to levy upon the lands mentioned in the following list for arrears of taxes due thereon and the costs as therein set forth.

I hereby give notice that unless the said arrears and costs are sooner paid I shall proceed to sell the said lands, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the aforesaid taxes and costs, at the Court House, in the Town of Napanee, by Public Auction, on MONDAY, THE 24th DAY OF NOVEMBER, AND THE FOLLOW-ING DAY, IF NECESSARY, in the present year of A. D., 1913, beginning at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, and in compliance with the provisions of the Assessment Act.

The public will please remember that this is a strictly CASH sale. Private cheques will not be accepted in settlement unless marked by the bank upon which they are drawn.

Non-patented or any lands in which the Crown has an interest are sold subject to these provisions.

THE FOURTH ESTATE

Novelized by
FREDERICK R. TOOMBS

From the Great Play of the Same Name by Joseph Medill Patterson and Harriet Ford.

Copyright, 1909, by Joseph Medill
Patterson and Harriet Ford.

He continued to stare at the lawyer. After a moment a faint smile appeared. "Ed Dupuy, that's funny," he continued—"that's awful funny. Well, don't it beat all? Don't you remember me, Ed?"

Dupuy couldn't place him as yet. "Why—ah, Mr. Nolan! Yes, it must have been. Let's see. Wasn't it Monte Carlo two winters ago?" he ventured.

"No, Ed, no; it wasn't Monte Carlo two winters ago. It was here in this town twelve summers ago. Remember now?"

"Twelve summers ago—twelve summers ago?" Dupuy reflected.

"The street car strike," reminded Nolan.

"Oh, yes, the street car strike," added Dupuy. Now he began to remember. He began to remember the part he, as the Consolidated Traction company's counsel, played in that war between capital and labor, and somewhere in it all he realized that a face something like the one before him had come to his knowledge; also the name "Nolan" had a familiar ring. "Nolan, Nolan!" he repeated to himself. No, it was "Dolan," he reassured himself; that had been the name of the man he had crushed and driven from the kin of men. Yes, that was it, "Dolan," and that man was a broken down and outler when Dupuy last heard of him.

Nolan saw that Dupuy was nonplused, and he laughed as he said:

"Yes, it was the street car strike, and you and Judge Bartelmy between you sent Jerry Dolan to jail for contempt, and that broke the strike after it'd been won."

"He was a dangerous agitator, was Dolan," pronounced Dupuy, directing an interested glance at the new owner.

Nolan drew a deep breath and, clinching his fists at his sides, replied to his arch foe of twelve years before:

"He'll be a more dangerous agitator from now on. I'm Jerry Dolan!"

CHAPTER IV.

THE declaration of the new owner of the Advance that new employer say in a voice that pulsated with determination:

"Yes, Ed Dupuy, I am Jerry Dolan, and I am back in the old town to pay my respects to my friends and—and—his voice shook—"to my enemies."

The whole truth now dawned upon the amazed McHenry and also upon Dupuy, who had been dealing with men long enough to know that his only successful pose at the present momentous time would be a conciliatory one. He must at all hazards smooth over this dangerous factor in the city's affairs, the returned Jerry Dolan, and persuade him that he was now his friend.

"Well, well," Dupuy began ingratiatingly, simulating a sickly smile, "this is a most interesting meeting—most interesting, indeed." He laughed as loudly as the nervously contracting muscles of his throat would permit. "But it is time now to let bygones be bygones, eh, Mr.—er—ah"—He again thrust forward the hand that the newspaper proprietor had refused to grasp.

"Nolan," answered the newcomer in his deep, strong voice, "No-l-a-n, with an 'N' and not a 'D' on the front end of it. That's my name now. I had to change it." He stopped abruptly and again directed his dark eyes menacingly on the face of the man opposite him. After a few moments he continued: "You see, Ed Dupuy, I was blacklisted as Dolan. Likely you'll remember that too."

Nolan reached out and, seizing Dupuy's hand, held it firmly. McHenry, at one side, witnessed with a distinct shock what he understood as Nolan's sudden resolve to, as Dupuy had suggested, let "bygones be bygones," else why should he shake hands with the man? Dupuy also felt a thrill of pleasure, even of triumph, as the one time chairman of the Street Railway Workers' union warmly shook his hand. Dupuy smiled and, bowing pleasantly, essayed to withdraw his hand from Nolan's grip and step away. But his smile turned to a wrinkled contraction of his facial muscles, indicating acute pain. The giant hand of the ex-striker, ex-miner, was closing with crushing force around the lawyer lobbyist's fingers and knuckles. It did not cease to crush, try as Dupuy might to wrest his hand free. At the moment when he felt that he must scream in his pain or else cringingly plead for mercy Nolan's grip partially relaxed, and he swung Dupuy to one side. A grim smile made its way into the furrows, won by suffering and privation in the Nevada mining camps and desolate gold regions, that marked Nolan's visage.

"You see, I'm stronger than you now, Ed Dupuy, just as you was stronger than me twelve years ago—you and Bartelmy between you." A great sigh escaped him as he finished.

Dupuy, now having freed his hand, rubbed it smartly with the other to restore the circulation to the flattened veins. He wheeled away to pick up his overcoat.

Nolan now addressed McHenry, who had seated himself at his desk.

"You're the managing editor?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I just want to tell you that that was a true article you had about that old hypocrite, Judge Bartelmy, this morning," he stated to McHenry. "Have another tomorrow and stronger." Another idea came to him, and "I see you are still on the job, Ed Dupuy."

"Well, it's business"—began the lobbyist defiantly. But Nolan would not listen to him. Thoughts vastly more important than conjecture as to Dupuy's motives now crowded his brain.

"Where is Brand now?" he asked sternly of McHenry.

"I think he is in the local room now, sir," pointing to the door at his left.

The new proprietor strode impulsively to the doorway and called at the top pitch of his powerful voice: "Wheeler Brand! Wheeler Brand!"

As he had hurried from the managing-editor's room after his dismissal from the Advance Wheeler Brand struggled valiantly against a wave of discouragement that assailed him and for a moment or two threatened to overwhelm. "Discharged for 'beating' the town on the story of the year," he muttered. "Well, I'll try to get on across the street," he concluded, "across the street" meaning the Guardian, the bitter rival of the Advance. He went to one of the long oak tables in the city room, where he seated himself next to Higgins, the leading police reporter of the paper, and began nervously to finish the story of a new bank merger on which he had been working when summoned by McHenry. When he finished he laid the pages of copy on the city editor's desk. He dragged a chair to a window, sat down and gazed moodily down at the crowds of people hurrying along the street below.

It was not his dismissal from the staff which chiefly concerned him. He was certain of obtaining another position. In fact, his reputation along Newspaper row was such, and he felt justifiable pride at the thought, that he would be at work within twenty minutes after leaving the Advance office if he so desired. But what did occupy his mind to the exclusion of almost everything else was the consideration of what view Judith Bartelmy would take when she heard the news of his dismissal. She had warned him that he was sacrificing his future in his attacks on the powers that be. Undoubtedly now she would be convinced, as some of his friends had already endeavored to convince her, that, after all, he was a fanatic, an impractical dreamer, who could not accomplish his ambition to right what he believed to be great wrongs, who could not, moreover, escape summary dismissal from his paper. But he must go on. He would go on. He would go that very night to a newspaper that would not suppress nor qualify the truth, one that would not distort facts nor misrepresent a situation in order to deceive the public, to which it was its duty to give the truth. Yes, and he would show the big thieves of the city that even if they managed to remain superior to the law at least they could not remain superior to public opinion. The time had come when—

"Wheeler Brand! Wheeler Brand!" The voice of Nolan came to his ears above the ticking of the telegraph instruments and the clicking of typewriter keys. Brand started from his seat. He did not recognize the voice, nor did any one else in the smoky city room, as curious upraised faces around him testified. It came from the managing editor's room, however, so he hastened to respond, wondering what strength forced him down he the chair. "From now on here," he announced. "You're ing editor now."

CHAPTER IV.

THE declaration of the new owner of the Advance that he was no less a personage than the blacklist victim of years back created the sensation that would a cannon shot in the dreamy solitude of the sylvan dells of Arcady.

Dupuy fell back as though struck by a violent blow. And, indeed, he and his interests would have every reason to believe, he now knew full well, that they had in all truth a new enemy to combat, an enemy that would cost them dearly if he were to be vanquished.

"You—you are Jerry Dolan, and you own the Advance!" the lawyer cried chokingly. "What are we coming to next?" he finally managed to say after a desperate effort to calm himself.

Jerry Nolan, for none other than the old time strike leader it was, enriched by his mining operations in the rock ribbed Nevada hills, thrilled with the realization that he was now in a position to strike terror into the hearts and souls of those who had attempted to destroy him and his loved ones. He knew that he had in his power the men who had almost succeeded in their designs against him twelve years before.

McHenry, at first even more puzzled than Dupuy and who was bending forward, with an expression of deepest interest and concern implanted on his features, began to understand the situation more clearly when he heard his

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I just want to tell you that that was a true article you had about that old hypocrite, Judge Bartelmy, this morning," he stated to McHenry. "Have another tomorrow and stronger." Another idea came to him, and he added, "Who was it got up that one today?"

Dupuy felt that he must come to McHenry's rescue.

"A young man who has since resigned," he interjected for the managing editor. Both McHenry and Dupuy were growing uneasy at the trend of Nolan's thoughts and words. A glimpse into the craniums of them both at this moment would have revealed the same thought to be predominating: "What is he driving at?"

Nolan appeared distinctly surprised at two things—first, that the writer of the story had resigned; second, that Dupuy should be so familiar with the matter. He took a step toward the latter.

"Resigned?" he asked in reverberating tones. "How do you know?" Before Dupuy could answer Nolan wheeled on McHenry. "Is it so, what Dupuy says?" he asked of the managing editor.

"Yes, sir."

"What's his name?"

"Wheeler Brand."

"What did he resign for?"

"Some of the big advertisers forced him to," admitted McHenry calmly.

A look of understanding tilted across Nolan's face. He shifted his glance from McHenry to Dupuy. Then, with a significant smile, he said:

writer keys. Brand started from his seat. He did not recognize the voice, nor did any one else in the smoky city room, as curious upraised faces around him testified. It came from the managing editor's room, however, so he hastened to respond, wondering what it could mean.

Brand entered McHenry's office and faced the three men, his surprise increasing as he saw from the attitudes of McHenry and Dupuy that a huge, rawboned, bronzed faced stranger apparently dominated the situation.

"Yes?" said Brand inquiringly to the stranger, whom he placed as the owner of the voice, because he knew it had not been McHenry's or Dupuy's.

"I am Nolan, the new owner," greeted the stranger.

Brand stepped forward and offered his hand, which Nolan grasped.

"How do you do, Mr. Nolan?" the reporter greeted him, endeavoring to figure just what the mysterious proceeding portended.

Nolan went straight to the point.

"So you've been fired for that Bartelmy article, have you?" he asked.

"Yes, sir."

Nolan turned and shot a triumphant glare at McHenry and Dupuy. Then CHAPTER V.

THE YEAR passed since the eventful night for Wheeler Brand when Nolan made him managing editor of the Advance. The months Brand made a showing of the paper that was never dreamed of by the owners preceding as being the range of possibility. Made the master of the paper and contently dictator of its policy, the man set a pace that the paper's found difficult to equal, much outstrip. His exposure of the is in the exclusive world of life insurance finance has thus proved the most vital reform of administration. As a result of this, which drove a half dozen officials from almost as many desks, the president of the United States publicly that "the vast insurance business of this country on the soundest financial basis ever had."

Wheeler Brand in the press of events had not forgotten Judge May. In fact, certain activities of estimable individual were just under close scrutiny by the one porter, who, if he could be pre-empted to speak concerning it, possibly observe that the judge was soon to have an opportunity to receive a few explanations which he received with undoubted injury to the public. The young editor for the hand of Judith Bartelmy might be said, since we are with a judge's family, to be in no. She was still waiting for to become sane," as she had exhorted herself to him. A girl of lofty and of decided strength of character, she could not see his duty as viewpoint. Perhaps it was a natural, quite womanly, quite early, that she should subscribe to her father's side in the famous case of "JUDGE BARTELMY VERSUS THE PEOPLE, WHEELER BRAND AND THE ADVANCE."

was loyal to her father, and she was going to be loyal to her lover. The task was becoming more and more difficult. Yet she waited, and Brand waited, and each prayed the other would end the ordeal of two breaking hearts.

When they find Wheeler Brand protesting toward the luxurious Nolan as a fashionable residential thore to visit the proprietor of the paper, he handed him a statement of the paper's progress, to discuss matter of editorial policy and to confer on a certain development concerning Judge Bartelmy.

When Nolan home a reception had announced, hundreds of invitations sent out, but the responses did encourage Mrs. Nolan in her aspirations. Society passed her hat was the whole story in Society, as usual, was ever so pleased with itself and was too good to include Mrs. Nolan, Phyllis, and her diversions. The father and father cared very little for her, but he loved the courageous, warm woman who had uncompromisingly shared with him the onerous responsibilities of his early days, and it was to gratify her ambitions as small stand, "don't rub it in, mamma! I can't help it."

"Now, who's blaming you, child?" consoled the mother. "There, don't cry. I'm not so disappointed about myself, but I can't bear to see you snubbed right and left. You are good enough to go with any of these people, and you shall too. It's that newspaper that's at the bottom of it. People won't have it, or us because of it, and I mean to tell your father so too. And that's why these 'at homes' is no good."

"Are no good, mamma," tearfully. "Well, are they? It would have been better to put your $750 into suffragette. That's what gets you in with the right people—not that I care to vote, but I don't want the men to say I can't."

Sylvester Dolan interrupted the conversation between mother and daughter by appearing before them with his bosom friend, Max Powell, who believed himself to have the makings of a master poet. It was with deepest pride that the Nolan son presented Powell, long haired, sallow faced and seedily dressed, to his mother and sister. Sallow faced? Indeed, his countenance had that sickly greenish yellow hue that comes from long deavouring of the muses and long abstinence from the devouring of food.

"Hello, mamma!" he cried enthusiastically. "Here's a friend of mine I want you to know—Mr. Powell, the poet."

"How do you do, Mr. Powell? You look as if it would be easy for you to write poetry. Do you know, poetry just sets me wild!"

Sylvester patted Powell on the back. "Well, this lad's going to make a big noise in poetry some day. Phyllis, you must have heard of Powell. My sister, old man!"

who read aloud these inspiring words:

So bright and beaming are thine eyes
The very stars twinkle in surprise.
Thy hair so like the dusky night,
Thy kiss so vibrant with delight,
I thrill unto my finger tips.
Oh, ruby, ruby—rougey lips!

Powell literally writhed in agony as he listened to the doggerel.

"It's great!" cried Sylvester ecstatically. "And now come get your tea. Gee, I'd like to take a crack at being a poet!"

The two conspirators hurried into the dining room as Wheeler Brand and the owner of the Advance came into the drawing room.

"You're right, Wheeler; you're right," Nolan was saying. "This is a better showing than I hoped for. Look in your stocking next Christmas. There'll be something for you. When I got into the newspaper business, Brand, they told me it was the beginning of my finish, that it sucked ten fortunes down for every one it built and no middle aged man ever went into it and came out again without teeth marks all over him. But look at that." He held up a typewritten statement. "I'm richer for going in—twice as much advertising as last year at this time."

Nolan seated himself on a settee. "The big advertisers never pull their ads. so long as they are getting returns from them," put in Brand. "Look at Dupuy. Remember how he threatened us and how his clients took their ads. out for two months?"

"Yes, but they put them back again." "Why? Because they need us more than we need them," Brand laughed.

"Well, he's got something else up his sleeve now," remarked Nolan. "He telephoned that he would come to see me this afternoon."

"Are you going to see him?" Brand asked curiously.

"I thought I might as well. He'll be here. Maybe he wants to fire you again." The newspaper owner looked up at Brand and laughed heartily.

Mrs. Nolan and Phyllis re-entered the drawing room, and Brand became the especial object of their attentions.

The mother desired to have him print the list of her invited guests who had never attended the reception. Phyllis requested him to print a story about the violinist and was vastly annoyed when Brand informed her that the subject was a matter for the musical editor to attend to.

"And there's something else, Mr. Brand." A look of despair came into Brand's face. "Phyllis went to Miss Bartelmy's musicale the other day, and you didn't even include her name among those present," the mother said.

"Why, I'm sorry. That was an oversight, I assure you. I suppose they made up the usual list in the office."

"People who live in icehouses shouldn't throw hot water."

Yes, contributed Phyllis, "and his daughter's one of the most exclusive and sought after girls in New York. She's the only one of her set who has been at all nice to me. Isn't that so, mamma?"

"Yes, and why the paper should go for her father just as it does for every other prominent man in town I can't see. She must think it's very funny that such things should appear in the Advance after what she's done for us."

"Oh," suggested Brand, thinking to soothe his employer's wife, "she probably knows that you have absolutely nothing to do with the policy of the Advance!"

"Is that so?" ejaculated Mrs. Nolan indignantly. "They certainly are very kind hearted people to act the way they do in the face of that paper."

"Judge Bartelmy is first and last a politician," explained Brand.

Michael Nolan bent forward intently. The conversation had now reached a point where he realized an issue of vital importance to himself and to the Advance had been touched on.

"Well, I suppose he has been meddling up to us a little," he began, then paused.

Brand drew a deep breath, stood up erect in the middle of the drawing room and daringly explained the situation to the owner of the paper.

father cared very little for it, but he loved the courageous, warm woman who had uncomplainedly shared with him the onerous hips of his early days, and it was his desire to gratify her ambitions as those of his daughter. The fact he had plucked from Nevada's bosom enabled him to be generous and he smiled approvingly on every extravagance of Mrs. Michael.

Therefore if she was socially ambitious she must have her way and owed to carry on her campaign of recognition in whatever fashion she pleased. Certainly the home he had secured was a fitting vantage ground from which to wage a war of dollars at the precipitous embattlements which the city's Four Hundred encircled its camp. Palatial in the Nolan residence was equally at home in its furnishings, and only a word from the magic lips of the aristocracy was necessary to monogrammed coaches in long the Nolan doors, to fill the costumes with distinguished faces, to overflowing with happiness the heart of Mrs. Michael Nolan. "Where, I noticed those caterer men linking all the champagne, and I stopped," she ordered loudly. Her bowed and went out. "Our guests won't come here to it, at least we will drink it out," Mrs. Nolan announced to Phyllis. "Well, we have done it—sent 10 cards, and who's been here? Nobody wants to see? This is a good time we've gone to all this expense for nothing and if you'll take my advice it's the last."

"Nana, Pitcher will hear," the girl said.

"Mother bit a grape from the skin. She deposited the skin and in a Sevres vase on the marble table."

"Phyllis, what did you have to pay the musician?" she asked. "Well, his price is a thousand dollars, gracious!"

"I got him for $750. I promised my fiance would help him." "Ten fifty for playing twice. I'd hear the band." Mrs. Nolan bit the grape. "I don't understand, mamma. Every one's wild over that violinist. It seems there wasn't anybody wild to come here." "There wasn't anybody," spoke the mother, correcting her mother. "Where was there?" retorted the daughter as she dropped the grape skin in the vase. "Dear," Phyllis wailed disconsolately as she seated herself before a

Sylvester patted Powell on the back. "Well, this lad's going to make a big noise in poetry some day. Phyllis, you must have heard of Powell. My sister, old man?"

"Won't you have a cup of tea, Mr. Powell?" invited Mrs. Nolan, visibly impressed by the presence of a poet at her home.

Powell started confusedly to utter his thanks. He did not seem over-delighted at the offer.

Sylvester saw the difficulty. "Tea," he exclaimed. "Absinth for Powell!"

Mrs. Nolan expressed her regret at not having any absinth and left the room, followed by Phyllis, to arrange for something for Powell to eat. "Poor fellow! He looks hungry," she whispered to Phyllis.

Sylvester caught the poet by the arm.

"One minute, Powow," he cautioned. "Be sure you don't mention anything to the folks about my little actress friend. I don't want them to know that I am going to take a crack at uplifting the stage. The little girl will be all right. She'll just make your libretto hum. She'll fill it with personality. Build up all those weak places. You know, Powow, there are some. Where's that poem for her? Finished yet?"

"Yes, it's here somewhere," fumbling in a pocket.

"Have you made it amorous for the little girl?"

"Judge for yourself. Of course I tried to write in your vein as well as I could, so that there would be no doubt to the authorship."

Sylvester read the lines:

Oh, Guenevere, how sweet my dear!
My spirit soars in dreams denied,
Worlds beyond worlds with thee, my bride—

"I don't like that much," he announced when he had finished. "Bride! Is it necessary to put that in writing? Besides, it doesn't sound as if I wrote it. Now, does it, Powow, old chap? Fess up."

"I hope it doesn't sound as if I wrote it."

"I thought you'd see it. Now, change that and it's a knockout drop. Can't you change it now? And I'll send it to the little girl tonight on a bed of orchids. Make it something beginning with 'ruby lips'—you know the sort of guff—and then here and there 'eyes like night, full of delight, something on that order.'"

Powell sat and wrote for a few minutes. "Here," he finally said. Sylvester glanced over the shoulder of the rising young genius.

"Ruby, ruby—rougey lips!"

"Why, I'm sorry. That was an oversight, I assure you. I suppose they made up the usual list in the office."

"I hope it won't happen again," remarked Phyllis indignantly.

"Yes, and the way it's handling this Loris divorce case is all wrong," snapped Mrs. Nolan. "I know Mrs. Loris. She is no better than she should be, and people who live in icehouses shouldn't throw hot water."

"We have no policy in the Loris case," remarked Brand in defense. "We merely print the facts."

"Facts?" Mrs. Nolan cried. "That paper upsets me for the whole day every morning."

"There now, mother; I guess the paper's all right," ventured Nolan soothingly.

"You've got another guess, Michael. Nobody reads it but shopgirls, who spend a penny for the Advance and another for a stick of gum and hang on to a strap with one hand and the Advance with the other while they're wagging their jaws all the way down to work. That's all that reads it!" She paused for breath, then went on, "And I must say I think it's scandalous the way you attack Judge Bartelmy every little while."

Advance had been touched on. "Well, I suppose he has been meddling up to us a little," he began, then paused.

Brand drew a deep breath, stood up erect in the middle of the drawing room and daringly explained the situation to the owner of the paper.

"Bartelmy handles people better than any man in town," he declared. "He has studied the Advance, dissected its position and—I will be frank with you—discovered its weaknesses. He knows he can't reach you through your cupidity or political ambition because you lack those qualities. He now realizes that his only hope of influencing us lies in an appeal to"—He hesitated.

"Well?" asked Mrs. Nolan ominously.

Brand found the courage to complete the sentence.

"His only hope lies in an appeal—to your family's social desires"—Phyllis rose from her seat, her cheeks red with anger—"and that's the only reason he has for taking you up."

Mrs. Nolan gave a scream of wrath. Nolan himself, regretting that the unpleasant scene had occurred, rose from the settee and advanced to calm the ruffled waters, but his face was clouded. Its serious expression indicated that he was deeply concerned over the frank statements of his managing editor, and one could instinctively feel that he was convinced that Brand had spoken the truth.

FIRE AND WATER

After the Storm Came the Calm of Love.

By LOUISE J. STRONG.

The fever scorched him physically and befogged him mentally. He tossed in a hot, restless haze, at times babbling childishly of "mother"—the mother whose loss three years before had sent him to the far west to try to forget his home grief. The struggle to master the new conditions attendant on ranch life had taken him out of himself and done him good, and as success crowned his efforts dreams of a home again, made so by the presence of a sweet faced girl wife, lighted his toll.

They were only dreams as yet, for he held himself humbly and had hesitated to offer his love until he felt that his affairs were on a firm basis financially, as they would be when his present abundant crop was harvested.

In his partial delirium and hazy wandering he muttered now the long repressed confession, whispering it eagerly with feverish impatience for the response his heart hoped for.

At length the silence which lay like the pall of desolation upon the lonely little shack was broken by heavy footsteps on the planks at the door, and a burly fellow strode in with a noisy greeting: "Hello, Harris! Laid up, hey?"

The sick man regained consciousness and smiled feebly: "How do, Lamson. Glad you came in. Yes, I've been laid up a bit—can't remember how long—fever muddles my head." His speech was broken and dragged thickly.

"Ain't wanting to eat much, I s'pose, and good thing that is, too, for an old back that's got nobody."

Harris winced. Mother had been in his sick fancy so much and with such vividness that his bereavement seemed but a few days back. With an effort he replied:

"I want nothing but water, and Slade brings me a painful mornings, when he doesn't forget, as he did today." He gestured toward the empty bucket on the chair beside the bed, but the visitor did not notice it—nor the longing in the fever red eyes and the cracked lips.

"Doctor, of course?" he intimated briskly.

"No. Slade wouldn't go for him, and no one else's been in."

"Slade wouldn't go! Ha, ha! Guess not much! You don't get the old ground hog that far from his hole back of the hill. Everybody's busier than in sheep shearing time, you know, harvesting their grain. Reason no one's been along, I reckon. I'm through in fine shape. I tell you, and I've promised myself and gang to Snyder for a week. And, man, you'd ought to be looking after yours. It's spoiling fast, I noticed." He laughed at the startled expression that widened the hollow eyes. "Forgot it, had you? Well, you want to see to it right away. I must said it was spoiling? It was all right. He would begin on it today, when he had a drink. He could drink the well dry. He fumbled clumsily with the bedding and essayed to rise, but fell back inertly, a little foolish smile on the parched lips. His head was so big! He had not known one's head could be so big and heavy. And the crop? The crop was all right. He would build the cottage—for—for Lizzie. Lizzie! He cried out hoarsely, with a pang of anguish at the sudden dull recognition of his loss. There was no Lizzie for him—none—none—nor had been. What mattered the crop? Let it spoil. What mattered anything now Lizzie—L-i-z-z-i-e—birdcage—Lizzie Brad—Liz? He scowled impatiently. He could not get the name right. His head was so big. He was so hot—burning.

Mother! Where was mother? Was she in the fiery lake that Elder Watson had so scared the little boys with? He hadn't meant to be a bad boy—mother knew—she would keep him, but he was so hot—burning! Water, water! Lizzie—Liz—Liz Brad—ley—Lamson! Lizzie Bradley? Lamson! The perplexed look deepened to a frown of pain and trouble. He had found her name, and as he drifted further and further from consciousness he carried her name with him back to little boyhood, tangling it with his brother's, but never losing it entirely again. Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—be careful Davy—mother said not to go so near the bonfire—but he did, Joe, the careless one—and now he was burning, burning—mother—Lizzie Bradley-Lamson.

"Oh, you poor boy, poor boy! Bring some water, quick!"

Did some one speak, or was it—again the little, foolish smile cracked the parched lips. He had known mother would come—she always did when her boys were hurt, even if they did it carelessly themselves—but she did not know how big his head was or she would not try to lift it. Oh, he was at the old spring drinking—drinking!

"He must not have too much at once, the poor boy!" A warm rain fell upon his face; the cup vanished; his groping, trembling hands could not find it. How could he have too much when he was burning? That wasn't fair, Davie, when his head was so big that he couldn't run.

"The brute—the perfect brute, to go off and leave him like this! Never even get him water!"

Was that father? No; Tige had not hurt him. It was the fire—and heedless Joe—where was the spring—and—the cup. There! Mother was bathing his burning head and face and neck, his hands and arms. He smiled at her and whispered "Good," and again the warm rain dropped upon him, and his big, heavy head was lifted and laid—why, it must be the cool, damp moss above the spring! It was heavenly! If it was not for the dreadful something that hurt so about Lizzie—Liz—Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—he could—Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—Liz.

"I don't know that any of us can say much for ourselves. Let such a sick man lie here alone for days—never come near him, so busy hustling for the dollars—but all the same, Lamson's a brute, with less feeling than a hog. And the thought that Lizzie'd—faugh!" Lizzie—Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—Liz.

"Don't say that, Joe Harris! Can't you understand? Lamson lied!" Liz

It was late the next day. The sun was sending its level rays across the door when Joe Harris came to himself and looked about with a calm and growing consciousness.

There was a faroff, cheery sound of busy machines. Through the open window he could see his fields swarming with men and teams. The food wagon and eating tent stood back by the well, the important cook bustling over a fire. His room was cool and fresh. Flowers stood upon his little home-made table with the doctor's medicine glass.

Bit by bit he studied it out, and as he recognized Mr. Bradley and the boys and other neighbors and Mrs. Bradley herself putting his freshly washed shirts upon the line his eyes filled, and he murmured a faint "God bless them!"

At the sound there was a stir by the head of the bed, and a girl with anxious eyes leaned over him and touched his forehead with a shy little hand.

He looked at her a moment; then he muttered feebly, questioningly, "Lizzie Bradley-Lamson?"

With a rush of tender tears she laid her warm pink cheek against his, murmuring: "No, Joe, dear; no! Lizzie Bradley Harris!"

CANADIAN COMPOSERS.

Many Fine Works Have Been Written in Toronto.

How do composers actually compose? This is a question which the layman often propounds to the musician. The burgeoning of the tonal creation would seem to be a process fraught with mystery. Does the tone-poet remain raptly poised with hand-clasping brow until the parturition of the musical thought is accomplished, or does he monkey away at the keyboard, alternately thumping and tickling the ivories until he gets a tune rounded up?

Well, it all depends.

Probably the most prolific amongst Ontario composers are Mr. David Dick Slater and Dr. Edward Broome, of Toronto. Mr. Slater has a large number of songs, anthems, and piano pieces upon the market, some of which are published under his own name, and others issued under the nom de plumes of "Kenneth Rae," "Paul Ambrose," and "Erland Hunt." Dr. Broome has

TALENTED LUNATICS

Clever Work Done by People Who Helplessly Insane.

"I am sure," said a well-known doctor, "you would be amazed at the clever work that is done by hundreds of men and women who are hopelessly insane; some of it at least as good as that done by sane people who earn incomes."

"Among my patients to-day many whose skill with the brush almost surely qualify him for his job if he were only in possession of his senses. There are few of the prohibitions which do not contain more of his canvases, and he has received a smuch as $500 for a picture. And yet this man is as 'mad as a hatter' the victim of terrible delusions subject to violent homicidal attacks."

"Naturally, his work is unimportant. One week he will produce a fine and beautiful picture, with great every line of it. The next he will have the most weird picture, a perfect mare in color, which, curiously, he always considers a masterpiece."

"There are hundreds of other cases who are just as skillful in art and literature. One of my patients, who is hopelessly mad, subject and who is a perfect genius, has composed operas and phonies and scores of songs which won considerable fame for him have brought him a small fortune."

"Even in our public asylums hundreds of patients who make by skilled work of one sort or another. Thus, in a county asylum I knew one man who does the most delicate water color sketches, for which he receives from $15 to $50 each, and a market for as many as he can produce."

"Another patient, a former student, spends his time in making most perfect tiny models of carved with infinite skill and from bone or ivory, for each of

And, man, you'd ought to be looking after yours. It's spoiling fast, I noticed." He laughed at the startled expression that widened the hollow eyes. "Forgot it, had you? Well, you want to see to it right away. I must mosey. I'm out on a sweet errand. Got my new house done. It's a beauty, too, and furnished tiptop. And now the cage is ready I'm going up to settle the date of taking home my bird. Lizzie's fought shy, but she'll pull steady when we're tied all right. Ha, ha!"

"Lizzie?" Harris repeated vaguely, his voice hesitating and troubled.

"Sure! Lizzie Bradley-Lamson. Kind of tidy name. I take it; something like those swell New Yorkers. Ha, ha!" He roared boisterously at his flash of wit. "Well, hope you'll pull up soon. So long!" He stamped away, whistling, leaving the door open.

In the silence that again closed upon him Harris lay and stared out at the quivering heat waves and little dust eddies that whirled in at times, aggravating his burning heat and thirst. But he did not notice them. He was striving to steady his throbbing brain and analyze the torturing inner sense of pain and loss which now intensified his bodily distress.

The crop—the c-r-o-p—that was all right. It was great. He could put up the dainty cottage he had planned so often these last months, since the promise of early summer had shown such abundant fulfillment in the ripening fields. The crop—the crop! Who

Lizzie—Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—Liz. "Don't say that, Joe Harris! Can't you understand? Lamson lied!" Lizzie—Bradley—Lamson—

"Oh, never mind, mother. He's too light headed yet. But the fever is cooling, and the doctor'll be here soon. Look out yonder. Ben's got a crowd all right. Joe's grain'll be in the stack in short order, and it isn't hurt yet, not an atom, in spite of Lamson's know it all verdict!"

Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—he was hurt. Did Lizzie Bradley-Lamson—no, he wouldn't—wouldn't put out his tongue. It was too stiff and big, like his head. And he wouldn't have a spoon in his mouth.

"Here, young man, you take this! Swallow it. Do you hear?" Some one shook him slightly, with the order, and he swallowed and grinned and said it was Davy's cough drops, and it was Lizzie Bradley-Lamson who—who made the fire. Was that little Sis who cried out sharply and sobbed? Davy mustn't hurt little Sis. He, Joe, was all right, only Lizzie.

"Oh, shut up!" the gruff one commanded. "I'm the doctor, and I say for you to drop it and go to sleep."

There was mother again, with the gourd from the spring, and he drank and drank till they took it away, and then he slid down and down and out where there was only a cool, quiet blankness.

ue gets a tune sounded up: Well, it all depends.

Probably the most prolific amongst Ontario composers are Mr. David Dick Slater and Dr. Edward Broome, of Toronto. Mr. Slater has a large number of songs, anthems, and piano pieces upon the market, some of which are published under his own name, and others issued under the nom de plumes of "Kenneth Rae," "Paul Ambrose," and "Erland Hunt." Dr. Broome has over sixty published compositions, including vocal solos, part songs, and anthems. He is also responsible for a very effective cantata, entitled "Hymn of Trust," for chorus, tenor solo, and orchestra, and published by Schirmer, of New York.

Mr. Henry J. Lautz is the author of a number of graceful songs of artistic character, which have seen the light of day both here and in the publishing offices of Germany. His "Grave of the Nameless" and "The Last Journey" are typical of the refined style which he has acquired under the guidance of Arnold Mendelssohn, of Darmstadt, his teacher.

Dr. A. S. Vogt's busy life has not permitted much compositional effort, but here, as in everything else which he touches, the hand of the master is felt, and his few published compositions for choir use evidence the highest skill in the treatment of the vocal possibilities, as well as a charming and polished musical style. His chant-setting of "The Lord's Prayer" has met with a tremendous sale, and his women's chorus, "An Indian Lullaby," and the part-song, "The Sea," have found a great deal of favor. A rather unique example of Dr. Vogt's activity is his book on "Pianoforte Technique," which has sold largely both in Canada and the United States.

Dr. Albert Hamm is on the list with a "Lullaby" for low voice, sung most effectively by Miss Margaret Keyes; and his unaccompanied anthem, "Far From My Heavenly Home," is a popular one with church choirs. Other vocal works stand to Dr. Hamm's credit, such as his attractive part-songs for women's voices, "The Twilight Hour" and "Blow, Soft Wind."

The number of those who are writing piano music is small. Mr. Edmund Hardy has produced a little tone-poem, "To Daffodils," which has found a wide sale, and his waltz entitled "Gathering Rosebuds" is a very pleasing number. A Christmas anthem of Mr. Hardy's, "The Infant Redeemer," has reached its third edition, and he has also a baritone solo, "The Song of the Reaper," dedicated to and sung by Mr. David Bispham.

Mr. W. O. Forsyth has written a number of piano pieces of serious purpose and inviting style, among which might be instanced the number entitled "By the Sea." A graceful song of Mr. Forsyth's is called "Love Took Me Softly By the Hand," and is published by Nordheimer's.

Mr. Frank E. Blachford is also known as the composer of some very effective music for the violin, and he has also turned his hand to the production of vocal works, one of which was most delightfully rendered by the Toronto Male Chorus Club, when it existed under Mr. J. D. A. Tripp's baton.

Mr. W. A. Wheelton stands almost alone as an organ composer in Toronto. Most of his works are published in England, and many of his numbers, such as his "Canzona" and his "Carillon" frequently find a place upon the recital programmes of the leading exponents of the difficult art of organ-playing.—Toronto Star Weekly.

by skilled work or one sort or another. Thus, in a county asylum I know one man who does the most exact water color sketches, for which he receives from $15 to $50 each, and a market for as many as he can produce.

"Another patient, a former settler, spends his time in making most perfect tiny models of carved with infinite skill and from bone or ivory, for each of which he gets $5 to $10. For one very exact and beautiful model of a cardinal he was paid as much as $15. It was certainly very cheap at the price. A third patient in the asylum earns many dollars a year by cutting the cleverest silhouettes in colored paper.

"Other patients are equally skilled in a very wide range of industries, inventing toys and puzzles to market, watches and picture frames and breeding canaries and mice to perfection.

"The women, too, are just as busy as the men. I know one devoted woman who writes the most interesting books for children, and various Christmas cards, another who has a good income, in her lucid hours illustrating books, and a third draws several hundred dollars a year from royalties on her plays. And are countless women in our public schools who earn money in several ways, such as knitting, lace making, straw plaiting and leather work."

London Statues.

The proposal to erect a monument to Sir Francis Drake in London is a reminder that the erection of statues to great British men and women is a practice of by no means new growth. The statue of Queen Elizabeth on the Church of St. Dunstons-the-West, which originally formed part of the new Lud-gate built in 1598, one of the earliest examples, which other was Herbert Le Sueur's equestrian statue of Charles I. at Chichester, which was cast in 1633. Then Londoners have successively erected every one of the Sovereigns and other statues with the exception of George IV.

Apart from the statues of contemporary men which are now put up prominently in London has within the last few years commemorated in this way, notable worthies long since departed. Not many months since Clive was commemorated by a statue in Whitehall, in the Old Palace Yard of St. James's Palace, presented by Lord Rosebery in 1899; the first London statue of Dr. Johnson was unveiled a year ago in the churchyard of St. Andrew's; and, to add but one example to the list, the first statue of a Londoner of that great Londoner, Milton, was unveiled in Fore Street in 1904. The next addition to the list of statues of national worthies will be one of Captain Cook, which will be unveiled in the churchyard of St. Andrew's.

Among my patients to-day is one whose skill with the brush would surely qualify him for high rank were he only in possession of his senses. Defective Sanitation.

In taking rooms for the children be sure to see that they are clean and well ventilated and also that the sanitation is good. Many cases of childish ailments have been caused by defective sanitary arrangements in their holiday home. In regard to apartments away from home particular care should be taken, for in remote places it will be often found that the sanitary arrangements are, to say the least of them, primitive. When holidays mark a change from sanitary to insanitary conditions it is hardly to be wondered at if they do harm instead of good.

PRESIDENTIAL MEDALS.

They Provide Likenesses for the Official Records.

President Wilson will soon pose for the presidential medal. When completed a few bronze copies will be struck off, and then the dies will be placed in the vaults of the Philadelphia mint, alongside the dies of medals of the twenty-six other famous Americans who have preceded Mr. Wilson as president of this nation.

Since the medal made of President George Washington it has been the custom to make the dies during the first few months of the president's term. This provides against the possible loss of his likeness for the official record.

Although the presidential medals are made early in an administration, some great event or catastrophe might cause the reverse side die to be re-engraved. If a man is elected to a second term the die for the reverse side is changed so that the dates of both inaugurations are recorded. A president's assassination also requires the re-engraving of the medal, so that the terrible deed may be banded down to posterity on the same medal as that which bears the likeness of the martyred president.

The reverse side of Lincoln's medal was engraved three times—first, shortly after his first election; second, after his election for a second term and again after his assassination and death, April 14, 1865. The medals of Garfield and McKinley were also re-engraved a few weeks after their assassination to record the fact.—Argonaut

NEBO FOREST SHEEP.

These Hardy Animals Go More Than Four Months Without Water.

Sheep in the Nebo national forest, Utah, go four and a half months without water except for such moisture as they get from the dew and the juices of forage plants.

Grazing sheep on a range entirely destitute of water is a recent innovation due to the increasing demand for forage and the efforts of the forest officers to find a place on the forest ranges for all the stock that can safely be admitted. The area on the Nebo which has now proved usable by sheep is high and rocky, a portion of it being above timber line, and it has neither springs nor streams of sufficient

"I haven't much to say to you except that I am very glad that I am here. I thank you, too. For such a splendid time I've had. I'm very glad that I am here. I hope to come again some day. That I am here I'm glad—I fear that this is all I've got to say."

CATHERINE OF RUSSIA.

"Semiramis of the North" Held Her Own Among Contemporaries.

Catherine II., the "Semiramis of the North," came to the throne a little over 151 years ago—July 10, 1762.

Catherine, daughter of the Prince of Anhalt, was born at Stettin in 1729. She had a hard time of it in her childhood, her mother being as mean to her as Frederick the Great's father was to him. At 16 she was married, against her will, to Peter, Duke of Holstein. Peter was a big, strapping animal of a fellow, but a degree or two above idiocy. He passed most of his time flirting with low women and playing with dogs and rats.

This fact explains, though it does not justify, Catherine's various little flirtations on her own hook.

By the death of Elizabeth, the semi-diotic dog fancier became Czar in 1762, but he was almost immediately set aside in favor of Catherine. So far as intellect and will power went the Princess of Anhalt was well qualified for the big place that came to her. She was well read in history, philosophy and literature; had absorbed, in fact, most of the knowledge of her time, and was mentally able to fill any throne on earth. She proved to be a great sovereign, as sovereigns went in those days. She made Russia powerful, and

The area on the Nebo which has now proved usable by sheep is high and rocky, a portion of it be- ing above timber line, and it has neither springs nor streams of suffi- cient size or accessibility to be used for stock watering purposes. The grazing season lasts from June 15 to Oct. 31, and during this period of four and a half months the animals do not get a drink.

Under such conditions, however, the sheep have done extremely well, and last year's lambs from this range had an average weight at the close of the season of sixty-eight pounds on the Chicago market, which was rather above the normal weight from that vicinity.

In one area on the Targhee forest in Idaho sheep get water only twice dur- ing the four months' summer graz- ing season. There is no water on the range, but the sheep are driven to a nearby stream lower down the moun- tain side.

Skyscraper Towns.

Opposite the postoffice, in lower Broadway, New York city, there has just been completed a building 780 feet high which will provide working quar- ters for 10,000 people. If all the men and women employed in this one sky- scraper should attempt to go uptown by the subway at the end of the day it would take the ten car express trains, running at the intervals now establish- ed, fifteen minutes to haul them away. Though this happens to be the highest structure in the city, there are others nearly as large. It is one of dozens that accommodate four or five thou- sand people each and one of hun- dreds that accommodate more than a thousand people each. The number of these great buildings is steadily grow- ing.—World's Work.

Queer Occupation.

Somebody has discovered on the elec- toral roll of the city of Melbourne a gentleman named Oliver Cromwell, who by occupation is described as a "theater packer." The duty of the "packer" is to squeeze as many people as possible into the pit and gallery. There have been complaints in Mel- bourne lately about his ungentle methods and his unchivalrous handling of women.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Heat Prostration.

Heat prostration may occur to those who are not exposed to the direct rays of the sun, but who are living under conditions accompanied by great heat and humidity, such as workers in laundries, bakeries, foundries, etc. In this condition premoni- tory symptoms or warning signs, such as a sick stomach, vomit- ing, a feeling of faintness, dizzi- ness and at times a sense of ting- ling throughout the body, are usually in evidence.

During very hot weather per- sons having these symptoms should go to a cool, shady spot, sit or lie down and keep perfect- ly quiet, awaiting medical at- tendance. In heat exhaustion or heat prostration the body tem- perature is never elevated, but may be below normal; the skin is frequently found cool and clammy, with free perspiration; the pulse is fast and weak. The afflicted person is very restless and may be unconscious. The natural appearance is often the same as that of a person who has fainted. Although in expert hands warmth may be applied and stimulants administered, yet it is advised, lest a mistake be made in determining the exact condition of the individual, not to give any remedies, but to await the arrival of a doctor, who should be sent for at once, and the person removed to a cool, well ventilated room as soon as possible.

Plaster of Paris.

Plaster of paris mixed with cold water has an expansion of about one- sixteenth of an inch to the foot when hardening. Should this be undesirable mix with warm water or limewater, and there is no expansion.

Boiled Puddings.

When making a steamed or boiled pudding plait the cloth in at the top to allow the pudding to swell.

Your Privilege.

Nothing is so boring as listening to a man talking about his ailments when you want to talk about your own.

but she was almost immediately set aside in favor of Catherine. So far as in- tellect and will power went the Prin- cess of Anhalt was well qualified for the big place that came to her. She was well read in history, philosophy and literature; had absorbed, in fact, most of the knowledge of her time, and was mentally able to fill any throne on earth. She proved to be a great sover- eign, as sovereigns went in those days. She made Russia powerful, and was in many ways a worthy successor to Peter the Great.

But the magnificence of her court, the marvelous extent of her dominions, her foreign conquests, and the impos- ing position she held among the "majesties" of the world could not hide the fact that at heart she cared but little for the Russian people, and did but little for the promotion of their political, social and economic advance-

Catherine demonstrated to perfection the fact—at that time somewhat in dis- pute—that a woman could fill a throne as well as a man, but she also proved that the woman sovereign can be as cruelly unjust as the man sovereign; for was not Catherine one of the lead- ing spirits in the partition of Poland, the "foulest deed in the history of the world?"

The Ever Busy Bee.

The life of the bee has been extolled to us as a virtuous, industrious, satis- factory sort of affair. Among other insects and animals, which have been presented to us as models of social and domestic propriety and felicity, the bee has always held an important position. We have been told that we should con- sider the ant and the tree toad and the early bird and the caterpillar, but the all-round example is the ever busy bee.

There should, however, be a limit to all things and there is such a thing as being too ambitious and too indus- trious. A hive of bees has been drowned in its own honey. It may have been the fault of the warm weather, but the bee made a big mistake in making honey this kind of weather. The bees were too stuck on their job—a pitiable joke, but a profound truth. People are occasionally drowned in the fruits of their endeavor, but the fruits of their endeavor are not often so messy as honey—a most uncomfortable sort of thing to be drowned in.

Insects are the busiest and perhaps the most useless creatures there are, and the ambition which stirs a bee to industry at such unseasonable hours deserves a tragic death. Everybody is busy all the time trying to get ready to enjoy himself when the best way to have a good time is to enjoy doing nothing at all.

DON'T BURN ROUGHAGE.

Expensive and Wasteful Practice With Cornstalks, Straw, Chaff, Etc.

A contributor to Farm and Fireside writes:

"A tendency exists among many farmers to burn up all cornstalks, loose straw, clover chaff and superfluous roughage about the place. But it is too expensive.

"Every time an acre of stalks is burned twenty-one pounds of nitrogen go into the air, and it will cost you $3.50 to buy it back again. Wheat or oat straw from an acre contains about twelve to fourteen pounds of nitrogen and clover chaff three times this amount.

"One can easily figure from these deductions what a reckless loss to the farm is a fire in the chaff pile or stalk field. The cutaway and disk harrows will chop these bulky materials up ready for the plow where they can be turned under. If you want to fatten the old farm, stuff it with organic mat- ter."

Lennox and Addington Teachers' Institute meets at Napanee Thursday and Friday, October 2nd and 3rd.

An inspection of the Napanee Collegiate Institute Cadets will be held by Major Gillespie, of Kingston, on Friday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the campus. The Daughters of the Empire will present the colors at the inspection. Speeches will be made by prominent speakers. The public are cordially invited to attend.

An old resident of Napanee in the person of Captain Wm. Rankin passed away on Monday. Deceased was probably the oldest resident in the town and the oldest Oddfellow in the Province. For a long number of years Mr. Rankin carried on a grocery business but retired quite a few years ago. For the past few years he has been totally blind. His wife predeceased him several years ago. The funeral took place on Thursday to Riverview Cemetery.

The death occurred at Ottawa on Saturday last, of Mr. Hiel Bowen, a former Napaneean, but for a number of years an employee of the government printing office at Ottawa. Mr. Bowen had been ill for a long time from consumption and had been confined to the Lady Grey Hospital at Ottawa since last March. Deceased aged 46 years, 3 months and 15 days and leaves besides his widow, five children, three boys and two girls. Messrs. C. W. Bowen and Frank Bowen, Napanee, are brothers. The remains were brought to Napanee on Tuesday and the funeral took place from the G. T. Ry. station to the family plot in the Riverview Cemetery.

Any manufacturer, producer or distributor of any meritorious merchandise that meets the wants of a majority of the people or any great class of people logically chooses the newspaper as the natural, sure and efficient medium through which to advertise his product. The newspaper covers the ground regularly. It is the newspaper that the people of a community look for the news, their ideas, their information. Newspaper advertising is being read and studied as never before. The markets of the nation are centred within the advertising pages of the newspaper. Local merchants will tell you how much they depend upon the newspaper to bring them customers and to keep their customers informed about their business.

The Rosary.

That charming human interest play,
"The Rosary," was revived last week at the Grand Opera House, Toronto, and judging by the large audience it has lost none of its drawing powers.
As presented by Ed. W. Rowland and Edwin Clifford (Inc.) under the personal stage direction of the author,
Mr. Edward E. Rose, it leaves nothing to be desired. Great credit reflects on the players, whose portrayal of the various characters is most acceptable. It is not necessary to give a synopsis of the play in view of the fact that it is so well known in Toronto.—Toronto Globe, Sept. 9th.

"The Rosary" will appear at the Colonial Theatre on Wednesday, Sept.
24th.

A Bad Accident.

On Wednesday afternoon a lad named Vannest whose home is in Deunigh but who has been working for Mr. Michael Wagar, South Fred-ericksburgh, was driving a team attached to a light wagon on Dundas street when one of the lines broke.
With the other line the lad pulled the team toward the walk but they turned too short and upset the wagon, breaking the tongue and whiffletrees.
The lad was thrown out and received injuries to his right leg and a number of bruises. He was taken to Wallace's Drug Store where his injuries were attended to by Drs. Straton Campbell.
He was later removed to the home of Mr. Hicks where he is doing as well as could be expected. The team were caught after running about a block.

Ports to Picton Fair on that day.

SPRING 1913

We are pleased to announce that we have been appointed sole representatives in Napanee for the House of Hobberlin, tailors to the Canadian gentleman. This firm we have been informed employs a most skillful and artistic designer to whom they pay the modest sum of $8000 per annum.
Their sample outfit is the most elaborate we have ever seen from any house doing a special order business.
We KNOW their Cloths are of a high order and the range embraces every line that a good dresser could desire.
They absolutely guarantee every garment they turn out to be perfect in fit and workmanship. Money back if not satisfactory, and no grumbling.
What more could any man ask. We would be delighted to show their range of samples to any man contemplating the purchase of a new suit. If you order and the garments are not entirely satisfactory to YOU it will cost you nothing whatever but the time you spent in making your selection. We know of no fairer way of doing business.

Samples are now ready for inspection at

A. E. Lazier's
